Hi Mary,

I know you probably won't get this since you keep telling everyone you have blocked my emails because I am such an ill, disturbed, sick person. So, I included Chris in it as well, so I could make sure you see it as it seems to impact him as well.

It bothers me, considering what a strong, Christian family you are that you continue with this line of reasoning. Between the email you sent to Justin on January 10, 2010 and the entire council in February, 2009 – as well as all of the other written and verbal comments that have come back to me – if you really believed I was as mal-adjusted as you keep spewing, that you would continue this line of attack. Must be all that top of the line training you have received. I know a mental health professional who says that people who accuse others of being ill are actually just recognizing their own short fallings. I am not prepared to say that is the case, but every time you ban someone, they come to our door to apologize or commiserate.

I am a non confrontational person when it comes to personal attacks at me. But, you know, everyone has a breaking point. So, I am wondering: do you have an attorney? If not, I think you should get one. Because I have really had enough of the junior high antics and 'look at me, look at me' behavior.

I have very simple goals for the process here. But, mostly, I don't make statements I cannot prove. So, I think that I deserve an apology. Or are you so intellectually arrested that this is the best you can do. Just attack me, instead of making valid contributions? Are you so threatened by me that you feel the need to contact any one who will listen and force them not to pay attention? And, then ban them when they do?

It is sad that you continue these diatribes. Your daughter will mimic them. At what point in your life did you decide that you were so awesome that you had no responsibility to be humble?

Here's my personal attack back at you:

If you and your friends would spend less time carrying the bible around and posting items online, and starting reading what was inside, I cannot imagine you would continue to set the example for the youth you have been gifted with. I am ashamed that I have ever known you. And, that is not a comment I make lightly. I had two very gifted grandmothers who were extremely compassionate. They taught me not to hate and to not act ugly. You are being ugly.

That's it.

Oh, except that since you decided to make Chris' work email address a matter of public record, so have I. In fact, we highlighted it on our website,

Thanks so much for your time. I so look forward to seeing you again.

Apology in hand.

Angela Flood
